Dialogue Workshop for Faith Leaders

Communication in a Time of Polarization

How do we honor the foundations of our faith in such challenging times? How do we lead the faithful through this divisive and polarized landscape? Following a faith that calls for recognizing, connecting with and even serving the 'others' in our midst has never been more challenging and necessary. As we become more polarized in this country and in this region; we become positions and not people. When we lose connection with our humanity violence increases.

A core answer — Dialogue. We simply must learn ways to dialogue across a wide array of perspectives, cultures, communication styles and life experiences. In Sacramento we have seen protests and violence increase; we are seeing the effects of systemic racism; we are seeing health, income, justice inequities and all of us suffer.

You are invited to a day of experiential training focused on the transformative power of dialogue that helps lead communities through division into a common good. Participants will be introduced to tools and practices that can be used immediately.
